FOUR MAJOR MEETINGS IN DIFFERENT DISTRICTS OF PARIS------

In the French capital Paris, the traditional stronghold of contestation, went on a procession of several thousand people (round 4000 according to Interior Ministry, and 8000 according to the Yellow Vests organizers) who had found Place de l'Etoile before going down the Champs-Elysées. Afterwards, they marched while crossing the Seine towards the Boulevard des Invalides (Opposite to the french National Assembly, and the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in the 7th district of Paris). Under a bright sun, the demonstrators paraded quietly against the backdrop of hostile slogans addressed to the police. They were no violences at this stage. After brief encounters on the edge of the Invalides esplanade with them, the "yellow vests" were scattered, as some joining the Champs-Elysees in the early evening. According to the police headquarters, 26 people were arrested, although the tensions seemed less than in Act XIII. A protester had his hand torn off during clashes in front of the National Assembly.

ALAIN FINKELKRAUT FRENCH ACADEMICIAN WAS INULTED OVER HIS JUDAISM

The Parisian mobilization, however, experienced a brief moment of tension when the procession crossed the path of the Academician, philosopher Alain Finkielkraut, in the late afternoon, at the 14th district, of Montparnasse.

In Lyon, several thousand demonstrators had gathered early in the afternoon in the city center, a mobilization similar overall to those of previous Saturdays. In the late afternoon, the demonstration of "yellow vests" blocked for two hours traffic in a direction of the A7

Driving, his colleague tries to find his way between two lines of cars, under the jets of projectiles. The prefecture of the Rhone condemned "with the greatest firmness the attack of CRS yesterday during the demonstrations of yellow vests in Lyon", in a statement published Sunday morning. The Lyon prosecutor's office opened an investigation for "acts of violence with weapons and in meetings of persons holding public authority", entrusted to the Departmental Security, without questioning at this stage.
